To analyse proctologic and colorectal diseases, we have to examine your anal region and the rectum or your abdomen carefully. In addition we usually have to do a proctocopy or rectoskopy. These medical examinations may cause some discomfort, but usually are not painfull.

For treatment of internal haemorrhoids we often use a sclerotherapy. That means that we inject an alcoholic solution above the haemorrhoids in the rectal mucosa.

In rare cases there can occur a swelling, bleeding or pain for a few days. Most of these complains disappear spontaneously. Other complications like infections are extremely rarely.

I have filled out that form to the best of my knowledge. I have read the information to the medical examination and agree to have a rectoscopy/sclerotherapy.
